Dear David:

Enclosed is a draft final report on our study on Japanese barriers to U.S. service trade. Separate drafts have already been sent to you on the law, accounting, data communications, and insurance. The present draft includes summaries of these sections, plus more extended treatments of advertising, banking, and securities. The final section of the paper develops our principal findings and policy conclusions.

We are now distributing the draft to a few people for comment and review. We are looking forward to your own comments and suggestions for revisions. If you would like us to get reviews from any specific people, please let us know to whom we should send this draft. Also, because of formal restrictions on work for your organization, we could use a statement specifying criteria for preliminary distribution for review.

We have learned a great deal from this research and feel that the capital that we have built up should not be dissipated. In other words, we are seeking opportunities to continue our efforts in this general area. We would appreciate any ideas you may have on this.

I personally want to thank you for the opportunity to get involved in this rich intellectual, policy stew.

Best regards,

Arthur J. Alexander
